Research Interests

My research develops large-scale optimization models and algorithms that make transportation and logistics systems more efficient, affordable, and resilient. I combine mathematical programming, decomposition and high-performance computing with agent-based simulation (POLARIS) to answer planning questions at metropolitan and national scale: where to place EV and electric-bus chargers, how to schedule transit and delivery fleets and transition them to new vehicle technologies, how drones and trucks should share last-mile delivery, and how shared and autonomous mobility and freight supplier choices reshape travel, energy use, and cost.
